Singer-songwriter LiLi Roquelin is living her best creative life. Back in France, teenage LiLi was discovering her passion for making and performing music, and daydreaming about one day moving to America. Now based in New York, she works as an award-winning indie composer and producer, something that’s more than a career – it’s LiLi’s life purpose. LiLi wants to inspire her young fans to follow their dreams, and if they don’t include children, to create fulfilling lives of their own. We talked about how expectations of women change from generation to generation, the kinds of social conditioning we’re still subjected to, and what a life without kids frees us up to do.

LiLi: I create in a different way. I'm an artist, I create music like, I produce something out of me. There's something really beautiful about women artists, because not only do we create in a feminine way, but I find with, you know, my moon cycles, and all the things are happening, were always happening. And I would always
